Something Like a Snake Story, [Straits Times.]

A sportsman, who penetrated into the jungle lying between Buddah and Democrat's Efforts to Force Party Sirangoon, came upon a lone but in a district called Campong Batts, upon the roof of which the skin of an enorm. ous boa or python was spread out The hut was occupied by a Malay and his wife, who told the sportsman the ollowing extraordinary story. One night about a week previous the Malay was awakened by the cries of his wife Supposing in the darkness that she ad been attacked by thieves, he seized his sharp parang and groped his way to her sleeping place, where his hand tell upon a slimy reptile. It was fully a minute before he could comprehend the entire situation, and when he did he discovered that the whole of his wife's arm had been drawn down the monsters throat, whith er the upper part of her body was slow. ly but surely following. Not daring to attack the monster at once for lear of causing his wife's death, the husband seized two bags within reach and com menced stuffing them into the corners of the snake's jaws, by means of which he succeeded in forcing them wider pen and releasing his wife's arm. No sooner had the box lost his prey than he attacked the hu band, whom ne began encircling in his fatal coils; but holding on both arms and watching his opportunity the man attacked the monster so vigorously with his parang that it suddenly unwound itelf and vanished through an opening beneath the attao side of the hut. The Malay's clothes were covered with blood, as was also the floor of the hut, and his wife's arm was blue with the squeezing it received between the boa's jaws. At daylight the husband discovered his patch of plantain trees nearly ruined, the box having in his agony broken off the trees at the roots, and in the midst of the debris lay the menster itself, dead The Malay stated that he had realized $60 from Chinese, who came long dislug in such a mummy into the body of tances to purchase pieces of flesh on ecount of its supposed medicinal properties, and that he had refused

Indian Ideas of Lightning.

I Spelish Mechanic ! The Indians of America have some curious ideas about thunder and lightcarrying provisions to the garrison. on the ground that experience taught | phe was attributed to the presence of whites. Nearly all the Indians of the United States imagine thunder to be caused by the flapping of the wings of a gigantic bird, while the flashes are iron serpents which everywhere accompany this animal. The ancient tribes of the Mississippi Valley worshipped thunder the form of a god, who was to be propitiated with sacrifices; they offered in a dog whenever it thundered or a child fell ill. This god was believed to produce fires. The natives of Honduras burn cotton seeds on the altar of the gods whenever it thunders. More outhern tribes do not offer sacrifices, And the graybacks come forth and but prostrate themselves abjectly on he ground on approach of a thunderstorm (which naturally diminishes their chance of being struck.
